I don't think it makes much sense for a suburban community like Denton, Tx to be lumped in a district that spans over 400 miles and includes economies that are completely different from those in Denton. Cattle farmers and those who live so far away share very little commonalities and we are not neighbors or part of the same networks and business communities. Districting maps ought to better reflect the changing demographics of our state, which includes more minorities. This state refuses to acknowledge that times are changing and that much of the legislation passed this last session does not reflect the values of the state. I'd like to see more evenly divided districts that would actually allow for some different opinions and politicians to rise up.
