The redistricting process looks like blatant, partisan gerrymandering. Cities in particular are cut up into bizarre-shaped squiggles that represent neither geographic closeness nor neighborhood social groups. Putting Frisco in with Red River county, for instance? There's no legitimate excuse for that. They're not even representative of the population of the state in terms of equal representation per person. I bet I could run a million simulation models of district lines from the census data and not even one percent of them would be this blatantly unrepresentative. This is obviously illegal and does not serve the people of Texas.
